The Warner Silver Bill Under Consideration To-Day.

Proceedings in Congress—Four Per Cents—Capital Gossip.

By Western Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The Senate Committee on Finance had a special meeting to-day to decide whether the Warner silver bill should be taken up for action the present session. The motion pending at the adjournment of the previous meeting was one submitted by Mr. Voorhees, that the committee proceed to the consideration of the measure.

Mr. Morrill to-day moved to amend the motion by adding: "And for the purpose of having time for its full consideration, further action thereon shall be postponed until the first day in December next."

The amendment was adopted by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Bay[illegible] Kernan, [illegible] and Allison. [illegible]ays—Mess[illegible], Voor[illegible] [illegible] Jones [illegible] by the same vote, and the whole subject was laid aside accordingly.

Spofford-Kellogg.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The Senate committee on Privileges and Elections to-day resumed the Spofford-Kellogg investigation.

Mr. Merrick, counsel for Spofford, offered in evidence the affidavit of Joseph J. Johnson to impeach the creditability of Johnson's oral doubts of the truth of its contents, and also to lay the foundation for the proof that this witness, since making the affidavit, has been subjected to the influence of seductive benefits and intimidations. Mr. Shellabarger, of counsel for Kellogg, objected, and the committee requested that counsel submit their legal authorities upon which they relied.

Thos. Murray, a colored sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives of the Packard Legislature, testified that Col. Souer occupied the room next to his, and Gov. Kellogg, on a number of occasions, directed witness to conduct members of the Legislature to Souer's office, which witness did.

Question—Did they ever tell you what they went for? Answer—Some of them have.

Q.—What did they tell you?

Mr. Shellabarger objected on the ground that the question proposed to elicit merely hearsay evidence.

Finally, Mr. Hill moved that the question be admitted, which was carried, Messrs. Hill, Vance, Houston and Bailey voting in the affirmative, and Messrs. Ingalls and Cameron in the negative.

Witness said the men who came before the election of the Senator were "hard up," and when they came they generally went to the Governor for a little money. Some of the men he took up to Souer's office told him they went to see when their warrants would be ready and others to get money.

Q.—Money for what? A.—Voting for Governor Kellogg. I say some men have as high as [illegible] which they said they got fo[illegible] for Kellogg, but they were colored men, and I do not rely on everything they say.

The Committee here had a private consultation.

XLVITH CONGRESS.

Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Mr. Coke asked Mr. Bayard, chairman of the Finance Committee, what action had been taken on the Warner silver bill. He had understood the committee had agreed to postpone its consideration until December.

Mr. Bayard did not feel authorized to say what had taken place in the committee. He would only say no member had been instructed to report on the bill.

Mr. Coke then said his sense of duty led him to offer a resolution to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill and to declare the bill before the Senate for action.

Messrs. Edmunds, Whyte and others objected and the resolution went over.

Mr. Edmunds resumed his remarks on the bill to repeal sections 801, 820 and 821 of the revised statutes.

House.

The army appropriation bill was reported, ordered printed and recommitted.

The House went into committee of the whole upon the bill making additional appropriations for the Post-office Department.

ST. CHARLES, MO., June 6.—The North Missouri train bore slowly over the great bridge spanning the Missouri into the wide-awake little city of St. Charles. It was loaded with ladies and gentlemen all in the gayest of holiday attire, and for a moment the POST-DISPATCH reporter, who had been composing his mind to a decently gloomy view of the situation, took this party for would-be witnesses of the execution. This was a mistake, however, as the festal party were bound to the commencement of the Lindenwood Seminary, to enjoy the annual triumphs of the sweet girl graduates, little thinking that the long watches of the night which they were chasing in gaiety and pleasure were being passed in feverish rapidity by a fellow creature whose young life was doomed to end on the morrow. While in the court-room wherein Blan's life had been so lately adjudged forfeit, another youth, a negro, was on trial for dastardly and cowardly murder, were being read in one part of the town, lawyers were struggling for a man's life in another, while in a third a weary convict was pacing to and fro in his narrow cell, dreading the fearful morrow, his fated day.

A long ride in a 'bus from the depot to the business part of the town, wherein one paid fifteen cents for the privilege of clinging, by pure cohesiveness, for there was no other hold, to the jolting top of the vehicle, brought one after many adventures to the "Galt House." Here, after indulging in supper, the party separated, the reporter going to hunt up Mr. Ruenzi, the Sheriff of St. Charles county, who was found at his office in the Court-house deep in a professional colloquy with Mr. Cook, the youthful Sheriff of Warren county. They had the rope which was to be used on the morrow out of the safe, examining it. It looked like and though not more than ten feet long had cost Mr. Ruenzi $7. It was a peculiar sort of rope, made apparently of sea grass, and said to have been tested by a weight of 2,000 pounds.

Mr. Cook said that it was his experience that a rope would stretch at least a foot in a drop of five feet, whereupon Mr. Ruenzi said he would take care that no accident should happen from that cause. The two Sheriffs went on talking about the merits of ropes and the advisability of using the same rope twice. Ruenzi keeps this one locked in his safe to prevent any possible tampering with it. The knot at the end has been very carefully tied by an expert, and consists of at least a dozen doubles of the cord upon itself, through which the sliding part is reeved. This latter is very carefully soaped, so that it will slip easily into an asphyxiating tightness on the victim's neck.

After the rope had been thoroughly discussed Mr. Ruenzi produced from his safe, a long, shapeless arrangement of bombazine or some similar material, and wanted an opinion on it. Both the reporter and Mr. Cook were of opinion that it was altogether too long. A slit ran down one side of it to accommodate the rope, but it would have been disarranged over the prisoner's shoulders, and scarcely performed the office for which it was intended. Mr. Ruenzi said that he had intended to shorten it considerably and the affair was once more hidden in the safe.

Dr. Johns, the county physician of St. Charles county, kindly accompanied the reporter to the jail wherein Blan is confined, making a slight detour to view the gallows.

stands in the middle of what seemed in the moonlight to be a potato patch. It is just behind the jail and was completed some weeks ago when Blan was first expected to pay the penalty of his evil deeds. As the pale moonlight shone down on it, the cross-piece with its malignant-looking rings was horrible, apart from its known purpose. It looked like the beam in a slaughter-house, whereon the carcass of an animal is hastily jerked and left to crepitate and dry. The drop is in the center of the platform of the gibbet, and is a foot or two lower than the other floor. It is controlled by a lever on the top, and seems to be constructed in as merciful a manner as such an engine can possibly be.

the murderer of Elijah Warren, was apparently very glad to see the Doctor and the reporter when they entered the jail. He was for the time released from his cell and shown into a sort of ante-room in which his visitors were sitting. He came forward easily and shook hands all round, apparently utterly unconscious of anything peculiar in his circumstances. It is a common comment of those who have been most about him that he does not seem to realize the situation. He talks easily and readily of the execution, but he talks almost as though it was about somebody else. He is a medium-sized, slight, rather good-looking young fellow of twenty-three, and if the story he tells be true, he is really expiating another man's crime. He does not look in the least like an assassin; his mild blue eye and wavering mouth give him rather the expression of a tractable, weak man, easily influenced by those among whom he may be placed.

He stretched himself out upon a table and said he was willing to tell anything, but would sooner be questioned as to his knowledge of facts.

"How did the trouble begin between you and Elijah Warren?" queried the reporter.

"It began about money that was due Bruce Bradshaw by Lije. It was about $20, and was owing Bruce for work with his team and wagon. I told Bruce that Lije had the money, because I saw him with it. We were all over at Alton at the time, and so Bruce tackled him for it. They both of them were mad, and had some words, and Bruce he called me and said, 'Didn't you say Lije had money?' I told him I didn't want to say, because I knew there would be a fight, but finally I told them both together that Lije did have a lot of ten-dollar bills, because I saw them."

"Who is Bruce Bradshaw?"

"He is, or I thought he was, the best friend I've got. I'd do anything Bruce told me to, and if I didn't think Bruce wanted me to do it, Lije would be alive to-day. I haven't got anything against Lije—he was my own brother-in-law, and always acted square, except once, when he hit my father, but that was long ago."

"What made you go to Lije's house?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, I jest went 'cos the other boys was agoin', and when I got there Lije said: 'John, this thing has gone far enough,' and he drew a pistol at the same time. I ran away at first, but got a club afterwards and struck him with it. He fell forward and I thought I had killed him. I talked the thing over with Bruce, and he said he didn't think I had killed Lije. He said Lije was a dangerous man, and talked like [illegible]e thought Lije would [illegible]ry to kill me. [illegible]ce would not let us (his brother and hims[illegible] have [illegible] gun, but he [illegible] Charley St. Cin[illegible]t his and Charley both told me the left barrel was the surest and had the best load in it, and Bruce told Charley to give me some water-proof caps. Before I left I told Bruce I would kill Lije before I slept. My family all tried to stop me, but I would go, and I did go. I crept to the window of Lije's house and took his pistol out of his pants pocket. I then went round to the front door and took steady aim at Lije's head, and I heard him snore when I was aiming. I fired and he stiffened and drew up. I saw my sister getting out of bed and I made off. I was so scared I ran against trees and saplings all the way home. Then I went and told Bruce what I had done. He told me to hide the pistol where nobody could ever find it and keep my mouth shut.

"If Bruce Bradshaw had told me not to shoot Lije I would not have shot him. I thought Bruce wanted him killed, though he did not say so. He seemed to talk and do everything to make me shoot him."

"When did the shooting take place?"

"It was the last day of last September. Bradshaw promised to keep the thing all to himself."

"How do you feel about to-morrow?"

"Well, I hope I'll die game. I know if I can get a little mad, I'll be able to talk to them. I'd like to live just a year longer. I'd try and do some good. Mr. Morton, the Presbyterian minister, has been with me, and he is going to be with me to-morrow. I'm not afraid to die. I believe Jesus can and will save me. I forgive

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

Driven to Suicide.

By Western Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, June 6.—Mrs. Magdalena Bouschoff, of Dayton, Ky., a suburb of this city, in a fit of anger badly injured a little daughter of a neighbor last week. Last night the girl grew dangerously ill. Mrs. B., hearing of it, and anticipating that the girl would die, committed suicide by throwing herself in a cistern. She had told her husband that if the girl died she would rather kill herself than have her children disgraced by her execution by the law.

Buried in the Debris.

CINCINNATI, June 6.—The Coroner has ordered all work in and around the Post & Co. building to cease until the walls are tested. One workman, who was known to have been in the building when the floors fell, has not been seen since, and it is supposed he is still buried in the debris.

QUEEN CITY RACES.

To-Day's Programme—Buckner Wins the Mile and a Quarter Dash in 2:12 1-4.

By Western Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, June 6.—The first race to-day was a mile and a quarter dash. The pools sold, just before the race, as follows: Buckner 50 against the field, composed of Claudia, Buckshot, May Walton, Rowdy Boy and Ida Davis.

The horses got off at the second attempt, with Claudia in the lead and Buckner second. At the first quarter, Buckner gained the lead, and held it with a gap of two lengths.

Coming in on the home stretch Buckshot came up and shot ahead, but Buckner was let out, winning by a head, with Buckshot second and Claudie third. Time, 2:12¼.

Extensive Fire.

By Western Associated Press.

DETROIT, June 6.—At an early hour this morning a fire broke out in Piere & Smith's hardware store, at Holly, Mich., and, before its progress could be stayed, destroyed ten buildings. A powder magazine in Piere & Smith's store exploded with terrible force, blowing off the roof of the building. Total loss, $240,000; insurance, $210,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—J. J. Ayres, editor of the Los Angeles Express, has been nominated from the Fourth District by the Workingmen's Convention, for Congress.

THE BROADWAY BANK.

No Depositions Taken To-Day—The Habeas Corpus Writ Not Yet Acted Upon.

The depositions in the Broadway Bank case were not continued this morning at the hour set owing to the delay caused by the cases of Sheriff Finn in the Criminal Court and the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Deputy Sheriff McEwen in Judge Adams' Court, it not being advisable to proceed until these were disposed of.

The Habeas Corpus.

When Judge Adams opened court this morning, Jailor Conway appeared promptly with Deputy Sheriff McEwen under charge, in answer to the writ issued by the Court yesterday. As the morning session was occupied entirely by the items on the motion docket, the case was not heard until 12:30, when it was taken up.

Considerable interest was taken in the matter, and there was a good sprinkling of auditors from the Sheriff's office and other "centers" about the Court-house.

Judge Finney, on behalf of McEwing, asked a continuance until 4 o'clock, but this was not settled upon. In the meantime Jailor Conway asked if the Court would take charge of the prisoner. This responsibility Judge Adams declined rather peremptorily and he stated that he was apt to call the case up at any moment, and suggested that Jailor Conway keep Mr. McEwen in custody and remain in the vicinity of the Court.

At 1 o'clock a recess was taken.

Several times during the afternoon it was suggested that the McEwen matter be opened, but the counsel were either absent or not ready, and the afternoon session died for want of material to live upon. McEwen in the meantime remains in custody until 4:30, when his term of imprisonment expires.

He was placed in jail last night and passed the night in company with Heath.

The Mound City Robbery.

The rumored robbery at Mound City, Ill., reports of which have been spread about the city, turns out to be real one after all. A strong effort was made to hush the matter up, but it has proved to be unavailing and the matter has already been put in the hands of the proper authorities.

The one horse car which runs between Mound City, Ill., and the Illinois Railroad Depot was robbed at 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning of a mail bag containing a number of valuable papers. A draft from Hill & Wright, of Boston, for $211, which had been sent to Mr. George F. Meyer, endorsed by that gentleman and sent to the German American Bank, and a check from Mr. Meyer to Gilbert Herbert & Co., of Chicago, are also missing.

The car was standing before the Illinois Railroad Depot, when the conductor entered it and noticed that the mail bag was gone. It was found about thirty yards away, completely rifled, only one old copy of a newspaper being found in it.

Kindergarten Exercises.

This morning the kindergarten of the Eads School, at the corner of Fifteenth and Pine, held its closing exercises. The school rooms were thronged with the parents of the happy little ones. The children ranged from the ages of four to six. They were all gaily attired. Mr. Hubbard, the principal, arranged an original tableau of the four seasons in which the juvenile pupils dressed to represent spring, summer, autumn and winter looked very picturesque. A novel feature was the band composed of drums, tambourines and triangles. The diminutive musicians kept time admirably. The programme consisted of songs and games. In the latter the little ones were grouped to represent a ship; then they hopped like frogs, formed birds, nests, baskets of flowers, etc. The exercises passed off amid merry laughter and general gaiety, both parents and children thoroughly enjoying themselves.

A DOUBLE DANGLE.

The Hanging of Monroe Guy, at Hillsboro.

He Relates a Remarkable Dream to the P.-D. Reporter.

Seven Thousand People Flock in from the Country to See the Sight.

Felix McCann, a Murderer, Dies on the Scaffold at Norwich, Conn.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

HILLSBORO, MO., June 6.—This is Jefferson county's gala day, and this little sober, old-fashioned, sleepy country place of a county seat is in holiday attire. No work is being done by any one, everything is laid aside for the time being and nothing is talked of but the execution of Monroe Guy. At the least calculation fully seven thousand people, embracing all ages, sexes and sizes, and about equally divided as to black and white, gathered in and about the town this morning. Some came from St. Francois County, some from Washington and Franklin Counties and a few from Ste. Genevieve County. They, in many instances came in last evening, and going out to the scaffold, a short distance southeast of town, camped for the night, so as to command convenient positions overlooking the upon which a fellow-mortal was soon to expiate that greatest of all crimes, murder. The great number of negroes which turned out occasioned some little alarm on the part of Sheriff Jones, who had caught up the rumors that have been flying thickly for several days of an attempt going to be made to rescue the condemned man, and a strong guard armed with double-barreled shot guns, charged with buckshot, were called into requisition. But luckily their services were not required, everything passing off as smoothly as could be desired, and no violent demonstrations being made.

The doomed man passed his last night on earth as quietly as could be expected. He had embraced the Methodist faith and believed his soul at rest, but could not exactly make up his mind that within the space of a few short hours he would be in paradise. It seemed an unnatural theory to him and he said to the Rev. Calvin Keating, colored, that while he did not fear to die he did not see what would be done with his soul. He slept but little, and that along towards morning, preferring to stand at the door of his cell with his head resting against the cold bars. He held a small Bible in his hands throughout the night and on several occasions quoted passages from the crucifixion to his guard of six men, who crowded near. He ate a hearty breakfast between 6 and 7 o'clock this morning, partook of a light lunch at noon, and at half-past 1 he was taken from the jail by Sheriff Jones, and, under an escort of headed by Deputy Sheriff Williams, conducted to the place of execution surrounded by the thousands of morbidly [illegible]s, eager to witness the atonement. The site chosen for the carrying out of the law's decree was hard by the cemetery, some three-quarters of a mile from town. A prettier or more appropriate one could not have been found, and the dense green foliage of the forest on the one hand and the white headstones of the city of the dead on the other made quite a striking contrast. On a small elevation between two small hills or ridges the scaffold was erected. It was a square, box-like, cumbersome affair, modeled after the one in the St. Louis jail yard, and was most rudely constructed. The flight of steps leading up to the platform was short, and the trap was secured and held in position by a heavy sea-grass rope. The noose was a new one, regular size, and dangled from the beam, swaying to and fro in the gentle wind like a sinewy serpent.

At half past 1 Sheriff Jones with a squad of fifty armed men conducted Guy from the jail to the scaffold, a distance of nearly half a mile. The prisoner was and on reaching the grounds he stepped out and on to the steps leading into the scaffold, where his heart seemed to fail him, and he hesitated to proceed. The man's hesitation was but momentary, though, and, swallowing down the load which had apparently risen in his throat, he stepped up on to the platform, and was followed by three ministers and some of the Sheriff's assistants.

As the prisoner mounted the gallows a tremor of fear shot through his frame, and he made a momentary halt on the last step, as if debating whether to go forward or turn upon the guards below. A death-like silence settled down over the crowd, and one could have almost heard a pin drop, everything was so quiet. The man's hesitation was but momentary though, and, swallowing down the load which had apparently risen in his throat, he stepped upon the platform.

A hymn was sung and Rev. Keating led in prayer, during which the condemned man almost broke down, but he soon recovered composure, and before the death warrant was read he made a few remarks, stating that he forgave everybody and hoped everybody would forgive him; that and was prepared to die. Sheriff Jones then adjusted the black cap and placed the noose around Guy's neck. After a few whispered words between the Sheriff and the prisoner the rope was cut, the drop fell, and Monroe Guy was launched into eternity, making but a few feeble struggles. In about ten minutes he was pronounced dead by the physicians and his body was taken charge of by Mr. Carroll, the undertaker, from De Soto, at the request of Guy's friends, who had raised money to pay for his interment. The immense crowd then separated peaceably, evidently satisfied that the execution was neatly done, notwithstanding the fact that the tender-hearted sheriff could only brave up to his duty by the most determined effort.

which Monroe Guy, the mulatto, expiated with his life was the murder of Aaron McPete, colored, near DeSoto, on last Christmas night, which can be summed up in a few words. The two men had been at outs for some little time and, as usual, there was a woman at the bottom of it all. They were rivals, both paying every conceivable attention to a young colored girl by the name of Nancy Thompson, who, as it appears, cared but little for either. Several days before the night on which McPete lost his life the rivals had met at Maria Breckenridge's house in De Soto, and in the course of a wordy war McPete branded Guy with being a coward and a liar. On Christmas evening Guy, who resided with his mother and four brothers at De Soto, and was employed as a porter in a dry goods house, borrowed a revolver from a friend and went out to the colored Methodist Church, one mile southeast of town, where a festival was in progress. Finding McPete there with his sweetheart, he sent a messenger to him with the request that he come out of doors for a moment. The unsuspecting man went out. Guy met him at the door, drew the revolver, put it to his breast and shot him

THROUGH THE HEART.

On firing the fatal shot, Guy put up the weapon, returned to the residence of his employer and acquainted him with what he had just done. City Marshal Davis was notified of what had transpired, and arrested the murderer, meeting with no resistance. The news of the murder spread like wildfire through the country, and within a few hours a hundred negroes had gathered with the avowed intention of lynching the ruffian. He was taken under a strong guard before 'Squire French of De Soto, and upon a preliminary examination remanded to jail to answer.

The grand jury being in session at the time, a true bill of murder was found against him, and his case docketed for the January term. It was called on the second Monday in January before Judge Louis F. Dinning of the Twenty-sixth Judicial Circuit and J. J. Williams and J. F. Greer appointed as his counsel by the court. The matter had attained so much publicity that it was a serious task to obtain a jury. A special venire of seventy-five was impaneled and out of that number forty were selected. Two days were consumed in securing the requisite twelve from that number and then the trial began, Prosecuting Attorney Thos. H. McMullin appearing for the State. The evidence elicited in the two days' t[illegible] [illegible]ning to the pris[illegible] [illegible]d to his hav[illegible] defense endeavored to set up a plea of self-defense, but failed ignominiously, and the jury after a short deliberation returned a verdict of guilty. In accordance with the verdict the Court sentenced Guy to be hanged on the 14th of March. A motion was filed for a new trial, but overruled, and then the case was taken to the Supreme Court. That court took up the case on the 19th of May and decided that the finding of the lower court was correct, but respited the prisoner to the 6th of June. When Guy learned of the verdict of the Supreme Court he broke down and

CRIED LIKE A CHILD.

His old mother, who is sixty-seven years of age, took the decision equally as hard as did her son, and became partially deranged. The doomed man sent for the ministers and professed religion. The divines who have ministered unto his spiritual welfare are A. Carter, Sullivan Frazier and Calvin Keating, the latter colored, and the jail has been thronged with visitors, principally Christian ladies.

Monroe Guy was as finely formed a man as one would wish to see. Although but twenty-two years of age he stood six feet one inch, weighed 205 pounds, and there was not an ounce of superfluous flesh about him. He was a mulatto, had been born a slave, and was always counted a good, honest, hard-working boy.

During his confinement of five months in jail he was very tractable, attempting to escape but once, on last Wednesday, on which occasion he succeeded in wrenching the hasp from his cell door and getting out into the corridor before being discovered and taken into custody once more.

He never made a full and truthful confession of the cause which induced him to murder a fellow-being, although it is known as stated above to have been and the following interview which your correspondent obtained with him last night is the only confession he left to the world:

"I shot Aaron McPete in self-defense and that alone," said Guy, in answer to a question of how he came to kill McPete. "He had his hand in his back pants pocket and was coming up right close to me at the time. I said to him, stepping back at the time, 'Aaron McPete, I don't want to hurt you, so keep your distance;' but he came on, and I took the pistol out of my pocket and shot him before I knew what I had done. He didn't say one word when I shot him, but fell on his face like a drunken man. I didn't know how bad he was hurt for a minute, and then the thought flashed over me that he was dead, and I put up my pistol and walked away as fast as I could. I was sorry then that I shot him; am sorry now, but I couldn't help it, as I done it in self-defense. He was not more than three feet away from me when I shot him. He was a bad man."

"Did you have any witnesses to swear that you did the shooting in self-defense?"

"No, and right there is where the trouble came in. Maria Breckenridge swore to an awful out-and-out lie, and my mother was mistaken in what she swore, though she did not remember it. She has got so old that she can't remember anything long, and I think it awful hard to have a mother

CONVICT HER OWN SON.

I don't deserve to hang, and never thought I would until the Supreme Court decided against me. It is mighty hard to die, but I will die like a man."

"What led you to quarrel with Aaron McPete?"

"Some folks say that it was on Nancy Thompson's account, but it wasn't. This is all a lie about a woman causing me to shoot him. He was an insolent no-mannered man who had sworn to have my life and was always trying to pick a quarrel out of me. Why, he told Will Keating the preacher's son that he would butcher me at the first chance, and I was looking out for him. I expected to meet him somewhere on Christmas, and, to prepare myself in case I should, I went down to Johnny Walters and borrowed Johnny's pistol. If I had not have got that pistol that day, Aaron would have killed me and been here in my place to-night, fixed just as I am; for I know he would have killed me if I had not have gone and shot first. I had about Aaron the night the Supreme Court said I must die, and before I got the news of what they were going to do. It was the only time I have dreamed of him since I shot him, and I know it will come true, for part of it has already. I dreamed that I broke jail and was caught and hung. When I was cut down Aaron came and pulled the rope tighter about my neck and looked at me so devilish-like. He raised the lids of my eyes, and though I was dead I could see him, but nobody else could. When they took me to the grave Aaron wen[illegible] [illegible] crowded down into the coffin with [illegible] [illegible] 'For God's sake, Aaron, go awa[illegible]' while the bloo[illegible] run [illegible] where I had shot him, he said, 'You[illegible] Monroe, that you are going straight to heaven, but you ain't. You are going down with me to hell, where I've been ever since you shot me.' I woke up then scared almost to death and I am now fearful that my dream will come true. I hardly think of Aaron at all. I think of nothing, but am afraid that the doctors will dig up my body."

The hanging of Monroe Guy is the second legal one that ever took place in this county. The only prior one was that of William Edwards, who paid the extreme penalty of the law for the murder of John Bridgeman sixteen years ago. There have been a dozen lynchings in the history of the county, and to the swift and free use of hemp may be attributed its almost remarkable reign of peacefulness and order.

Guy's Companion.

In the jail at Hillsboro Guy had a companion, William Hildebrand, a brother of the outlaw Sam. Bill Hildebrand murdered a young German in Jefferson county in August last and fled the State. Last week he was apprehended in Pocahontas, Randolph county, Arkansas, and on a requisition brought to Hillsboro. Mr. T. H. McMullin, the able Prosecuting Attorney of Jefferson county, will conduct the case for the State.

A Coincidence.

There is a remarkable coincidence in the fate of Blan and Guy. Both men were sentenced by the Circuit Courts on the same day early in February. They both appealed, and the Supreme Court decided their cases on the same day and fixed their execution for the same day, and the penalty of the law was accordingly paid on the same day.

NORWICH, N. Y., June 6.—Felix McCann was hanged at 11:30 o'clock to-day for the murder of J. Morris Hatch, at Nigger Hollow, Sherbourne, December 3, 1878. His dying words were asking forgiveness for all his sins, and FORGIVING ALL HIS ENEMIES.

After hanging sixteen minutes McCann was pronounced dead. Only thirty-one persons, including Sheriff Hill and other officials, were present. There were ten thousand persons in town, and most of them surrounded the Court House square.

East St. Louis.

An accident occurred in the Indianapolis and St. Louis Railroad yards last night that cost William Healey, a switchman, his left arm. About 9 o'clock he was in the act of coupling some cars, when, by some accident which he cannot account for himself, his arm was caught between the drawheads and was horribly mashed. A couple of doctors were called, who pronounced it necessary to amputate the arm from the elbow. Healey was taken to St. Louis, where the operation was performed, and then taken to his home on Short street.

...AKING about the appointment of Mc... United States Judge, the Chicago ...:

... a lunatic asylum can be ... guileless as to suppose the appointment, over District Judges of long and honorable service, to have been made with any regard to those principles of civil service reform to which Mr. Hayes, in his weak, goody-goody fashion, subscribes. It was not made because of any eminent standing of Secretary McCrary at the bar, nor because of distinguished legal attainments and judicial character and fitness upon his part for the bench. He is distinguished solely as a professional politician and party manager. His only prominence has been that of a moderately successful partisan leader in his State. In his political career he has failed to develop more than mediocre talent as a party manager.

THE question as to whether beer is an intoxicating beverage or not is one which has frequently puzzled the courts and baffled the investigations of the moralists. We have tried to believe that beer was not intoxicating, the Brewers' Convention has unanimously affirmed that beer was not intoxicating, and the amiable and popular senior proprietor of the Republican has been heard to express his conviction that beer was not intoxicating. In attestation of this belief Mr. Knapp yesterday attended the banquet at the Germania Club House and delivered an address in his usual felicitous manner, but this morning he states in the editorial columns of his paper that the banquet was given at the Lindell. This confusion of ideas is a not infrequent phenomenon after a banquet, but its appearance in the columns of the Republican compels us to draw one of two harsh conclusions, either that beer is intoxicating, or else that some other beverage besides beer was served out at the brewers' banquet last night.

A GOOD PLATFORM.

"Resolved, That we declare it as the sense of the Democracy of Ohio that not a dollar should be appropriated by Congress to pay soldiers, deputy marshals or supervisors of election to interfere with or control elections."

RACE WEEK.

If there is any country in the world which lacks amusement it is this country, and if there is any city which needs amusement it is St. Louis. James Parton says that this country is so badly off for light amusements that it is obliged to take up the cast-off amusements of France and England. But St. Louis does not even do that; it does not amuse itself at all.

We doubt whether there is another city in the world in which the custom of business is so universal, and the hours of business are so protracted as in St. Louis. It is the universal testimony of visitors, and it is the sad conviction of our own experience, that we all spend too much time over the desk and too little time out of doors. It is mere habit, a bad habit with no profit in it. Instead of getting rich by overwork, we sink into mere dull plodders and drudges, realizing the truth of the adage that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

Therefore, we ought to support more ardently such amusements as are in our reach and embrace more eagerly every opportunity that calls us away from our work to relaxation and amuseme... and open-air enjoyment ...cially, to sec... ...f the Jockey Club in making St. Louis a racing center. There is no finer track in the world, no better accommodations, no more exciting races and no more courteous management than are to be found by visiting the breezy slopes of Cote Brilliante and watching the swift contests of the flying racers during the coming week

THE RAG-BABY DEAD.

After all, the most encouraging sign of the return of common sense and the death of the rag-baby in Ohio can be found in the platform of the Democrats. If Gen. Ewing is not for honest, hard money, the platform upon which he stands is. If the convention that nominated him believed either in "fiat" money or any other absurdity it took great care not to say so. The POST-DISPATCH is uncompromisingly for honest, hard money. It is against all efforts in the direction of inflation or repudiation. It does not believe in any paper money that is not redeemable in coin. It is utterly opposed to the idea that the general Government shall, in times of peace, have the ruinous power of making or changing at its will the amount of money in circulation, or make money out of rags. But the financial plank of the Democratic platform of Ohio, while certainly not written as we should have written it, is already a very great step in the direction of right ideas. Here it is in full:

Resolved, That we reaffirm the financial principle heretofore advocated by the Democratic party of Ohio, that the issue of money in the form and the regulation thereof belongs to the General Government alone and ought not to be delegated or entrusted to individuals or corporations; that we, therefore, oppose the perpetuation of the present national banking system as a means of control over the currency of the country, and demand the gradual substitution of Treasury notes for the national bank currency, to be made receivable for all dues and a legal tender equally with the coin, such Government issues to be regulated upon principles established by legislation or the organic law so as to secure the greater possible stability of value.

Now, whatever objection may be made to the forms of expression, it is worthy of attention that this does not contain one syllable against resumption; not one syllable in favor of "fiat" money; not one syllable even in favor of "more greenbacks," or the duty of Congress to "regulate the volume of currency" in accordance with the wants of the people. On the contrary. The plank clearly says that whatever paper money is issued must be equal with and redeemable in coin, and should be of the "greatest possible stability of value."

This, surely, is neither inflation nor repudiation, but a wonderful improvement on past financial planks. If it is still not quite what it ought to be, it is enough to show that the rag-baby is dead and buried.

NOT TOO FAST—SOMETHING WORSE THAN A THIRD TERM.

The tendency of the average Democratic editor in discussing the third term is to drift into twaddle. It is astonishing that so able and brilliant a journal, for instance, as the New York Sun should fall into the mistake contained in the following editorial opinion:

Su... ...instance, the Republi... should succeed in electing a man like John Sherman President. The country would survive it. A different man, with different principles, would be far preferable; but, as we say, the country would survive. Whereas, if any man were to be elected to a third term, it would amount to a virtual adoption of the monarchical idea of perpetual rule in the same individual or the same family.

We certainly do not agree with this. The country would survive even Grant and a third term, if that third term is obtained by the will of the people or the law of the land. A first term obtained against both is infinitely more dangerous than a third or even a fourth term obtained by the will of the people.

To hold, for instance, that the election of a man like John Sherman, by the employment of force and fraud and the prostitution of the entire power of the army under the leadership of his brother and the immense patronage of the Administration, would be less dangerous than that of Grant to a third term without those agencies, seems to us an exceedingly short-sighted view.

Better, infinitely better, a lawful third term than a forged or fraudulent first term!

If the people want to elect Grant to a third term, they have a perfect right to do so. If his military prestige or glory, or the memory of the late war, or other elements, can obtain another term for him lawfully, he has a perfect right to take it. And the country would survive it. But the country will not survive another electoral fraud like that of '76. The country cannot survive another defiance of the will of the people and subversion of the law. The Republic could not survive to see the very author of the first Presidential theft not disgraced, not punished, not driven into ignominy and oblivion for the infamous crime against the Republic, but honored, elevated, himself placed into the seat stolen by him for the present incumbent!

The Sun has sincere abhorrence for the greatest fraud of the age. How, then, can it under any circumstances favor the election of the very author of that fraud? Or has it forgotten that without John Sherman Hayes never would have received the nomination, never could have received the stolen votes of Louisiana, never would have received the perjured vote of the commission or the benefit of the infamous count?

No, no. We are against both Sherman and Grant. But if it came to a choice between them, we should a thousand times prefer the man who, with all his faults, was lawfully elected to the man who is chiefly responsible for the last theft of the Presidency. Better a third than a forged term.

PUBLIC OPINION.

A Temperance Fraud.

ST. LOUIS, June 6.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

It is about time that the public should understand that neither Frank M. Bemis nor the conduct of the National Prohibitionist has merited or received the approval of the temperance people of the city of St. Louis. Immediately ...ing his unkind reception by members o... ...e Brewers' Convention now in session, an agent is put upon the streets to solicit subscriptions to his paper, upon the egotistical supposition that the public can but regard him as a martyr in the great and noble cause of temperance reform. It is to be regretted that he has been gratified by having his nose pulled, and, as a result, obtained a notice for himself and his paper that neither deserved. It is a matter of surprise to me, however, that he was received unkindly, for it is a fact recognized here by a large majority of temperance people that he has done more to retard the cause of temperance in this city than he has to injure either the character or business of the brewers or distillers. He should have been honored with a place on the platform, and complimented by Mr. Rueter for doing good work in their cause, by indirection, that could not have been effected by any friend of lager beer. This is a recognized fact with us, and I assert as an additional fact that there is not more than one temperance organization out of thirty or more in the city that could or would endorse his conduct or his editorial management of the Prohibitionist. We no longer wish it to be published that he represents us, as temperance people, or the cause of temperance, because it is not true. I have not written this because of his recent undeserved prominence, but because I know the best and most influential laborers in the cause have remained silent under the supposition that he could obtain no other or higher character in public opinion than he had obtained among those with whom he pretended unselfishly to labor.

Business Over, Pleasure Rules the Hour.

A Ride Around the City and a Trip on the River.

They Carry Away Most Pleasant Impressions of St. Louis and St. Louis People.

The business proceedings of the National Brewers' Association closed yesterday, and to-day has been given up to seeing the city and pleasurable entertainments. The members met at Germania Hall this morning at 9 o'clock, and spent nearly an hour in social intercourse. The banquet-room looked deserted and desolate, but in the garden and halls below it was delightfully cool and invigorating. There was an abundance of fresh foaming beer, free to all, and a royal lunch for all those who were disposed to partake, after the feast of last night. The Germania Club is certainly entitled to the thanks of every one who has been in attendance on the convention for the magnificent manner in which they have served the good things to eat and drink. The lunches which have been set for the association every day at noon have been in themselves alone sufficient for an ordinary banquet.

IT SPEAKS WELL,

not only for the Germania Club, but also for the liberality of the St. Louis brewers.

A long line of carriages were on hand this morning, and about ten o'clock the members of the association were driven to the photograph gallery of Mr. Cramer, corner of Fifth street and Chouteau avenue, where a picture of the whole company was taken, which will soon be finished up and ready for exhibition. This over, the carriages once more formed in line and passed up Chouteau avenue to Lafayette Park. A drive was made through the grounds, which excited the admiration of every visitor, and then the company proceeded to Tower Grove Park and Shaw's Garden. At 1 o'clock they reached the Fair Grounds, where a sumptuous lunch was ready, prepared under the supervision of Mr. Jo. McCullough. The members of the association were greatly pleased with as well as the Zoological Gardens, and expressed themselves astonished at the extent and growth of St. Louis and the admirable provisions made for the comfort of her inhabitants.

Late in the afternoon the company returned to the city and took a first taking a view of the great bridge, and then going down the river as far as Carondelet. Everything during the whole day went as "merry as a marriage bell," and the time will be long remembered by the good-humored and prosperous visitors.

A number of the delegates will leave for their homes to-night and will be gone by to-morrow evening. Without exception they express themselves as delighted with St. Louis and the people here.

The convention was well managed throughout and showed that brewers not only know how to conduct their own business well but that they know how to manage a public body as well.

A CONVENIENCE.

One of the many conveniences of Germania Hall provided for the National Convention is a branch of the St. Louis Post-office, improvised for the occasion and presided over by the genial and energetic Mr. Emile A. Becker, Inspector of the St. Louis Post-office. Col. Sam Hays, P. M., as well as Mr. Becker, has won the hearty praise of the members of the convention by the enterprise they have shown in providing and carrying out such admirable mail facilities. Several bags of letters and papers have been sent off by the association each day, and the experiment of establishing the branch office has proved a great success.

A CAPITAL SPEECH.

What Lincoln Thought and Said of the War Democrats.

[From General Steadman's Speech to the Ohio Democratic Convention.]

According to the published biography of this gentleman, Mr. Foster, he was twenty-eight years old in 1861, when the war broke out. He had then just reached the zenith of his young manhood, and he was a sterling, loyal patriot, but he was not loyal enough to shoulder a musket or gird on a sword [laughter and applause], and go to the front to fight the battles of his country. He stayed at home, like a great many of those loyal patriots, and made money out of the people and soldiers. [Cheers.]

The Republican party has persisted in this absurd claim that it is the only loyal political organization in this country, until almost every man who belongs to it really believes that he is a patriot and a hero. [Great laughter.]

Now, I assert here to-day, fellow-Democrats, and I defy contradiction when I make the statement, that at the close of the war, with two or three honorable exceptions, every soldier who had won distinction and was in command of a department, of an army, or of a corps, was furnished by the Democratic party. [Great applause.] Remember that the men whose failure in the war brought disaster to the Union, and cast disgrace upon our arms, were not Democrats. [Applause.] Remember that the Vances, the Schencks, the Fremonts, were not furnished by the Democratic party. [Applause, and a voice, "Hit him again."] I make another statement here to-day, and there is a living witness in the State of Ohio who was present when Mr. Lincoln made the utterance. The first time I ever saw him was after the battle of Chickamauga, when I was ordered by telegraph to report in person to him. [Applause.] I went up and called upon him, and Mr. James M. Ashley, who is living, heard the conversation. Mr. Lincoln took me by the hand, greeting me wermly. He told me he was glad to see me. Still holding me by the hand, he said to Mr. Ashley: "Brother Ashley, what would have become of us in this war if it had not been for the fighting Democrats of the Northwest?" [Applause.] Mr. Ashley, with a shrug of the shoulders, said: "Well, Mr. Lincoln, I don't know." Then Mr. Lincoln replied: "Our rebellious friends would have had their flag floating at the Capitol, sir." [Applause.] He says, "The truth is, Brother Ashley, that our party is made up, to some extent, of the religious and sympathetic element, and they don't make first-class soldiers." [Great applause.]

It is time, high time, fellow-Democrats, that the Democrats in this country assert their right a to full share in the honor and glory of the success of our arms, in the late war of the rebellion. [Cheers.] The war was put down by the men of iron nerves and fearless hearts, men who came from all the avocations of life. It was not the Republican politicians who did it, and they have no right now to attempt to throw this stigma upon the Democratic party, which furnished its full share of all the soldiers that bore our arms to victory. [Applause.]

Pinafore at Uhrig's.

Uhrig's Cave will present a brilliant scene this evening with the fine audience that will be present to see the performance announced by the Pinafore Company. After the conclusion of Pinafore Mr. Arthur Sullivan's operetta of "Trial by Jury" will be given with Mr. Charles Vivian as Judge and the whole strength of the company in the cast ... most laughable comedies that has ever been acted, and the melodies are as fascinating as those of "Pinafore." Mr. Chas. Vivian will also give his clever sketches of wit, humor and song during the evening. On account of the length of the bill arrangements have been made for the cars to run eastward until midnight. To avoid the crush at the doors tickets can be obtained at Balmer & Weber's music store.

To-morrow evening the management give the whole of their profits to the family of the murdered Officer Printz. "Pinafore" and Mr. Chas. Vivian's sketches will be on the programme.

BELLIGERENT BREWERS.

How They Assaulted and Battered a Prohibitionist Editor.

Mr. Frank M. Bemis, managing editor of the National Prohibitionist, was seen around the Four Courts this morning searching for a warrant for the arrest of those individuals who assaulted him on Wednesday forenoon, while he was crossing the street at the corner of Eighth and Gratiot. Noticing the gentleman a POST-DISPATCH reporter button-holed him and secured the following interesting account from him of his little tilt with the brewers. Said Mr. Bemis:

"I was crossing Eighth street, going down Gratiot, on Wednesday morning last, when a brewer named Friedhaus stepped up to me, saying, "Are you that prohibitionist?"

I answered "I am." He then drew off and dealt me a blow under the chin. The blow staggered me. A gentleman named P. N. Berry, who resides at No. 800 S. Eighth street, witnessed the occurrence and cried out 'Shame.'"

"What reason had Mr. Friedhaus for making this attack upon you?" asked the reporter.

"The reason all arises from the last issue of the Prohibitionist, which contains contributions from the various States in the Union, criticizing the brewers and the business they are engaged in. My last issue shows clearly that there is no pure beer made in this country, and this statement seems to have enraged the brewers, and as they cannot meet these facts with arguments they have to resort to fisticuffs?"

"Mr. Bemis," said the reporter, "the public would like to know what business you, as a temperance man, had in wishing to gain admission to the brewers' meeting on Tuesday last?"

"As it was a public meeting, and all good citizens had been invited to take part in the welcome which was extended to the brewers by the Mayor, I desired to attend in order to secure a report of this drunkard-making criminal association for the paper which I represent, and I was the only person refused admission to the building that night."

"Do you intend prosecuting all the parties who assaulted you both on Tuesday night and Wednesday noon?"

"Yes, I do. I have sworn out warrants against Ellis Wainwright, Rudolph Schmidt and Julius Friedhaus. These three individuals were the leaders in the assault made upon me on Wednesday morning. They were coming out of the Germania Hall when Friedhaus struck me. Wainwright had before this called me names and assaulted me, at the same time ordering beer. When the beer was brought out in the street to him he threw the contents into my face and then struck me over the head with the beer glass. While he was in the act of beating me another one of the crowd crept up behind me and poured a glass of beer down my back and over my clothes."

"Have any of these parties been arrested yet?"

"Yes, three, and they are out on bail. The charged preferred against them is assault and battery."

SEARCHING FOR SANDERS.

The Funny Side of the Wild Goose Chase.

Sergeant Chapman, of Chief McDonough's staff, says that if Sanders, the assassin of Officer Printz, is not soon arrested he will resign the position he has filled so long and well. "I am worn out," said Chap this morning to a POST-DISPATCH reporter, "reading communications from all parts of the country which contain the startling information that Sanders was seen here, there, and everywhere else. The Deputy-Marshal of Litchfield, Ill., writes that he has seen Sanders' sweetheart. She has not seen that individual since the occurrence of Sunday night, but has vowed that should he happen to favor her with a call she will tip the aforesaid Deputy Marshal the wink and put him on the track of her wicked lover in double-quick time. The Marshal really thinks that the girl means business. "The next letter on the programme," continued the sergeant, "is one from a gentleman who fills the important position of constable at Chenoa, Ill. He wants to know whether Sanders has a wooden leg and a scar on the forehead. This, notwithstanding the fact that the constable in question has already been furnished with a full description of the individual wanted. Here is a postal card from an individual who lives near Belleville, containing the startling intelligence that a human being, whose appearance tallies exactly with that of Sanders, has been seen prowling around the woods in that vicinity with a revolver in each hand. Last night we received a telegram from City Marshal Raysdale, of Chester, Ill., saying, 'I think I have Sanders in jail.' Chief McDonough at once ordered Officer Finn, who knows Sanders well, to go down there and see whether the Chester authorities had the right bird caged or not. This morning Finn telegraphs, 'Man here not Sanders.'

"A few moments afterwards we received another dispatch from Detective Huthsing saying, 'Have seen man, not Sanders.' Huthsing has been following up a lot of trackmen and probably wound up at Chester."

An Appalling Spectacle.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Pretty little girls wading and paddling in the surf make an attractive spectacle. But when a pretty young lady of twenty summers or thereabouts, and wearing a jaunty Gainsborough hat, undertakes the same pastime, the scene is a novel one. Such a young lady on a part of Manhattan Beach, which was secluded for a moment, thought it would be nice to join the little children, and pulling off her shoes and stockings ventured in. It was evidently a most difficult task to adjust her dress to the rising and lowering tide, for she gave her whole mind to it and succeeded very poorly. Everybody passing that way paused, and the young men took seats, determined to fight it out on that line if it took all summer. In a few minutes a crowd of two hundred persons, mostly men, had gathered. The smile on the young lady's face changed to a tragic frown, and a mother's sharp cry hastened her withdrawal to the background, where, screened by a close phalanx of female friends, she restored shoes and stockings to their proper place in the economy of civilization.

COURTLY CUSSES.

J. Philip Krieger's Case in the Court of Criminal Correction,

Together With a Lot of Little Cases and Items

Picked Up in the Four Courts To-Day.

How Sauer's Game was Spoiled.

August Sauer tried to raise the wind yesterday; to-day he is reaping the whirlwind in a cell at the Four Courts. August went down to the residence of Mr. Paegles, No. 2410 Jackson street, and, representing to that gentleman's wife that he had been sent by her husband to procure a book containing a check for $168, induced her to let him have it. A short time after Mr. Paegles returned to his home and was somewhat stunned when he learned of the transaction. He hurried away to the bank and gave orders to have the party presenting the check arrested, and when Sauer showed up he was promptly collared.

Yesterday's Contempt Case.

Messrs. J. R. Harris, R. S. MacDonald and E. L. Farish appeared in the Criminal Court to-day as attorney for Sheriff Finn, charged with contempt in having ordered his deputy, McEwen, to arrest Henry Gross, one of the grand jurors, yesterday, for refusing to obey a notary summons.

Owing to the time of the Court being occupied with other business, the matter was laid over till Wednesday morning next. McEwen the deputy who served the writ, was taken out of jail on a writ of habeas corpus, and taken down to the Court of Appeals.

Charged With Burglary.

The Marshal this morning lodged Louis Randall in jail to await examination before Judge Cady on the 9th inst., on a charge of burglary preferred by F. C. Rapp, No. 309 North Fourth street. The prisoner is one of a trio composed of himself, Wm. Thornton and Edward Doyle, who, it is said, forced their way into the premises mentioned, and got away with about $75 worth of shoes. Randall was the only person captured.

Lost Her Ring.

Annie Macanari, residing at No. 1504 O'Fallon street, has procured the arrest of one Otto Assick, a neighbor, whom she charges with having stolen a gold ring valued at $6. Otto is in the lock-up, where he will remain until the 9th, when Judge Cady gives him audience. His friends think he Otto prove himself guiltless of the charge.

Snugly Jailed.

William McCarron has changed his residence from No. 2637 Papin street to the city jail. William flourished a hatchet over the head of his wife Bridget, and that good lady, having borne patiently her husband's abuse for many, many days, resolved to have no more of it. Hence William's change of address.

The Krieger Embezzlement Case.

In the Court of Criminal Correction this morning the case of J. Philip Krieger, Jr., the much-advertised bank cashier, charged with embezzling untold sums of money from the patrons of the busted Broadway, was called and continued until the 16th. Krieger was not in the court-room, but was represented by his attorney.

First District Police Court.

There were no less than fifty-two cases on the docket in this court to-day. Nearly all of these were against parties charged with trespassing and violating city ordinances, the facts in all these cases being devoid of interest to the reading public.

Court of Criminal Correction.

Wm. Edger got on a frightful tear, and went down on Almond street to clean out things. He had kicked in a door and smashed a window at John Sewell's house, when a peeler nabbed him. He was charged $10 for his fun.

Michael Fitzpatrick and John Dundon, two young stable hands, arrested on a charge of stealing a keg of beer from the wagon of a picnic party, had a hearing, and were discharged, there being no proof whatever against them.

Lewis McKenzie, a moke of the worst kind, and a "pal" of the notorious Arthur McCoy, was sent down to the Work-house for nine months, for stealing three pairs of pants from the Fourth street store of Kent & Miller.

Sarah McCune is a hard case. She will steal anything, as witness the fact that she laid her claws on an overcoat belonging to J. McMurray, of Twelfth street. The court sent her to the Work-house for an even twelve months, and overcoats and red-hot stoves will be safe for a short period, anyhow.

A Bogus Tennyson.

Mr. Tennyson's publishers announce that "The Lover's Tale" will shortly be reissued. This seemed hard on the enthusiastic admirer who bought that copy at the Pickering sale for $200. But his case is even harder than it seemed. That copy was not itself genuine. Mr. Tennyson discovered that some unscrupulous person had reprinted this rare poem from an imperfect copy, and that these forged sheets formed the whole or part of the volume in question. This it was which induced him to give once more to the world a work which his own judgment had once condemned ...uppressed.

everybody and want ev... ...me. I have no hard feelings ...ying to die in a proper spirit."

At this point the voice of ... Prosecuting Attorney, Mr. Alexander, who was pleading for the State in the murder trial already alluded to, was heard all the way from the court-house.

"I wonder," said Blan, "if he will hang that poor nigger, too? Well, he only did his duty by me, and I bear him no ill-will."

"Is there anything I can get you, or do for you?" said the scribe.

"Well, yes;

I'D LIKE TO HAVE A FEW CIGARS."

Promising to get them, the reporter shook hands with him, and, for the time being, took his leave. After staying over in the court-room over an hour and going to various parts of the city, the cigars were bought and brought to him.

"What!" said he. "Back already?"

That one remark was enough to show how time was speeding with him. The sands of life were indeed running with lightning rapidity through the glass for him.

All the preparations are made, even to the ordering of his coffin, and it is now hinted about the town that his drop through the trap will be the signal for a mob attack on the jail, where Thomas Jackson, alias several other names, is now confined.

Sheriff Ruenzi will have eighty men under arms in case of an emergency, but he evidently does not put much faith in the rumor. Still, other gentlemen assert that the people are extremely excited, and even the certainty that the court now sitting will condemn Jackson to death may not save him from immediate violence. One thing is positive, if the jury, which is at this present moment out and seeking a verdict, fail to find one or do not adjudge death to the prisoner, there will be a serious and dangerous riot, and the negro will be hung.

IN THE MORNING

the yards about the gallows began to fill up with people from the country and the town. At half-past 6 men and women had already begun to seat themselves in favorable localities, and the high ground just west of the gibbet presented the appearance of the crowded parquette of a theater. Blan passed the night tranquilly; about 12 o'clock he went to sleep and slept easily and peaceably till about 4 o'clock, when he was awakened by the guard, given a dram of whisky and told to make himself ready. Warm water and a new suit of decent black clothes were brought to him, and he washed and dressed himself very neatly. He drank during the morning about three quarts of strong coffee, but steadily refused to take any more whisky.

When the poor fellow saw the guards with their muskets filing about the prison he seemed to first realize his position, and

BROKE DOWN ALTOGETHER.

He cried like a child, but seemed to master himself with an effort, and straightened up. Mr. Morton, the Presbyterian minister, was with him early, and did all in his power to administer effectually the consolations of his church. Blan seemed to take it as it was meant, and by every means in his power prepared himself to die as he had not lived. Sheriff Ruenzi, assisted by Mr. Cook, adjusted the rope on the gallows about 7:30 o'clock, and after this was done all of the guard and the members of the press collected in the ante-room of the jail to see Blan brought out. The minister asked for five minutes more time, which was, of course, granted by the Sheriff.

At last the time came when Blan was told to stand up; and he clenched his teeth tight together. His arm was upon the preacher's shoulder, and with a sudden motion he threw that gentleman into a corner of the cell and leaped to the cell door. Dr. Johns, who was standing at this point was struck in the face and knocked away from his position and Blan got into the ante-room in the midst of a startled crowd of guards and reporters, some of whom did not have the presence of mind and others had not the wish to stop him.

HIS FACE BECAME DEATHLY WHITE,

HIS EYES WERE GLARING

and he was evidently desperate. A glance around the room showed him that there was no weapon he could seize and he ran into the next room. The front door was open and the road to liberty barred only by two excited guards, who were standing at the foot of the stairs leading into the jail yard. A Mr. Benman at this point succeeded in throwing his arms around Blan from behind, five or six others were piled on, and the poor fellow was overpowered, though he made a wild fight for freedom. His arms were drawn back and pinioned closely together, and he was forced back to his cell. All this was the work of a few seconds. In fact, it was over before the crowd knew what had happened, and yet there was the wildest excitement for a moment. Three of the guards were at once put in the jail door with their arms charged, and every avenue of escape was blocked.

Of course, the attempt was simply desperation, for the yard all about the jail was fenced in with a blood-hungry crowd who would have lynched him at once had he got into their clutches.

The crowd surged forward, pressing on the fence, where the guard stood, some of them thinking that an attempt to get the negro William Barton had been made, and all of them eager for the lives of both of the prisoners. The confusion was quieted, however, in a short time, and in the delay which ensued the POST-DISPATCH reporter went into the cell where Blan was confined. The prisoner was standing in a corner of the cell with four or five men around him, his arms were drawn painfully back, and he was still breathing stertorously from the excitement of the past minute. The light had all gone out of his eyes, however, and every two or three seconds ran through his frame.

"What did you hope to do?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, I don't know what I hoped. Good God, I have no hope—I don't want to die yet."

"But those people out there would never let you get away."

"Oh, if I could have got outside of that door once they would never have got me. I'd have been miles away by now."

"When did you make up your mind to try this thing?"

"I didn't make up my mind—I saw the way open and I went for it."

After a little further waiting the Sheriff came in and said, "Get ready now, the time is up."

"I thought I had till 9 o'clock," said Blan.

No reply was made to this, and, with a guard holding each of the prisoner's pinioned arms, the party made for the scaffold. As we passed out of the jail-yard, the coffin, which had been put to one side under a covering, caught Blan's eye; he looked at it sharply, but said nothing. When he mounted the steps firmly and stood just behind the hole wherein was the drop. His preacher stood behind him, and the reporters present had seats provided for them on the platform of the gibbet, not four feet away from where Blan was to swing.

The Sheriff stepped out to the front and took the warrant out of his pocket and began to read it. The paper recited the different steps of the suit in law, and once when the Sheriff paused in the reading, Blan cleared his throat and said huskily, "Is that all of it?" No attention was paid to this remark, and the reading was continued. A crowd of at least had by this time assembled about the scaffold. The yard in which it was, as before stated, was kept clear by the militia. Right under the gallows stood the doctors, watch in hand, waiting for their part of the solemn duty of the day. When the reading of the warrant was concluded Blan looked anxiously towards a steeple clock some distance away and said nervously: "Is that clock right? Remember my time is till 9 o'clock." Mr. Martin, the Presbyterian preacher, stepped forward at this point and addressed the multitude. He said: "Since May 1 I have visited Blan regularly. I find in him no bravado, nothing but Christian humility and readiness to pay the penalty he has incurred. I can bear testimony that he has expressed sincere penitence for his sin."

Mr. Martin's remarks were brief and to the point. At their conclusion he offered prayer to the Almighty for the poor soul who was soon to stand in judgment before Him.

As soon as the prayer was concluded the officers stepped forward and assisted Blan on to the drop. He was then firmly bound with cords by Deputy Marshal Snyder. Each leg was tied separately first, and the rope passed around the other. The legs were tied in two places and the arms pinioned a little more tightly.

The Sheriff then asked Blan if there was anything that he could do for him.

"I'd like to have a little drink of water, just enough to wet my mouth," said Blan. "What time is it by that clock? I have till 9, haven't I?"

The water was sent for by Mr. Ruenzi, and during the pause which ensued everybody stood silently looking at the victim. His eyes were glued on the distant clock, and his tongue every moment moistened his lips, which seemed to become glued together. The water was brought at last, and only a sip taken; then the Sheriff hastened to pull the black cap down over the prisoner's head. It had hardly been adjusted, however, when he asked tremulously that it might be taken off. "I want to say something," said he, "and I want to see the light." The cap was instantly removed by the kind-hearted Mr. Ruenzi, and Blan straightened himself up, looked at the crowd and the clock,

AND CLEARED HIS THROAT TO SPEAK.

"My friends, I am going to die here before you all. I done the deed, and it's all right that I must die. I would like to live a year yet. I wish every body well. I hope you'll all be good. I was as good a man as anybody some years ago, but whisky and bad company brought me to this. I'll bid you all good-bye. I was led into this by others."

The black cap was once more adjusted. It was pulled down as far as it would go, and the rope put on over the cap. It was fixed in position by Mr. Cook, of Warren, and drawn tightly on the ... of the victim. He said, "You ...rawing it too tight." But in ... poor fellow his ... were not heeded ... ...ghtly to.

Underneath the scaffold the eager doctors had grasped his wrists almost before the body had ceased swinging, and were noting the number of the pulses. As the reporter stood beside one of the physicians, he noticed that Blan's hand was becoming purple and black, his collar had pulled loose in the fall, and his head was hanging over to one shoulder, exposing part of the neck, which had a very congested appearance, from under the black cap.

At the end of his first minute the pulse was 98, at the second 80, at the third 42 and getting very slow. There was a flutter of life at this point, and the pulse at the end of the fourth minute was 90, the fifth 108 and very irregular; th... it began to go down; at the sixth minute ... was fluttering 77, and becoming slowe... every beat. When life was declared ext... by the doctors the body was cut down and ... into the coffin to await the action of ... friends.

As soon as the drop fell, by a preconcerted plan the militia at once filed into the jail. It had been rumored that the breaking of Blan's neck was to be the signal for the lynching of the negro Barton.

The lower floor of the jail was accordingly fully occupied, and if the mob make any attempt they will assuredly meet with a warm reception; for Ruenzi, while his conduct toward Blan shows him to be tender-hearted and merciful, is not the man to be bulldozed by any man. If the thing is tried somebody will assuredly get hurt.

Found Guilty.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ST. CHARLES, MO., June 6.—Although we are to have a hanging here to-day considerable talk is going on in regard to the verdict brought in by the Criminal Court jury finding William Barton, a negro who killed James Clatterbuck, a white man, on the 18th day of February last, guilty of murder in the first degree. Sentence has been deferred in the case until Saturday.

The crime was an unusually atrocious one. The two men were employed as farm hands by Mr. Thomas Stonebraker, whose farm is located a few miles from here. At the time of the murder there were five men employed at shucking corn.

Among them was a young white man of probably twenty-five years of age, named James Clatterbuck. He was a stout, hearty young man in the vigor of life. He is represented as having a most gentle disposition and so good-natured that nothing seemed to vex him that was done in no spirit of malice. All agree in their praises of his amiable character. Clatterbuck belonged to Jefferson City, where his parents reside. He came to this county about last harvest and stayed and worked around with various farmers in the prairie until the terrible event which deprived him of life.

Another hand among the shuckers for Mr. Stonebraker was or Will Barton, a low-sized, heavy-set mulatto, aged about twenty-one years. He had been in the neighborhood but a short time and had worked for Mr. Stonebraker but from the Monday previous. Nothing about him indicated a desperate character. He worked hard, and when Mr. Stonebraker reproved him for not cleaning his corn better, he answered meekly enough that he would do better next time. But there was a in the man which needed little provocation to arouse, and which in one moment of concentrated wrath wrought mischief more than enough for a lifetime. Mrs. Tom Stonebraker is an invalid, and has been for some time at the home of her father, Mr. Goddard. So the men on the Stonebraker farm were keeping bachelors' quarters—cooking for themselves and attending to their own concerns, having plenty of room and nothing to disturb their tranquility except their own bad passions. On the morning of Saturday, February 15, the men were late getting to work. Breakfast, however, was over, and the process of cleaning up was in progress. Clatterbuck was washing the dishes. He turned to Tom Jackson and told him to carry out a slop-bucket and empty it. Jackson rose up yawning and declaring that, by G—d, he didn't feel like it. "By G—d, I'll make you do it," said Clatterbuck. Nothing more seems to have been said. Jackson went out, got around the side of the house, crept into the window of the main building, and possessed himself of a gun heavily loaded with goose-shot.

THE FATAL FIRE.

Thus armed, he made his way back again to the corner of the lodging house and waited. Meantime Clatterbuck kept on at his work, having no idea danger. An old man named John Collins had carried out the slop bucket. Clatterbuck had swept the kitchen and came onto the porch to sweep further, when, with dendly aim, the whole charge of shot was sent into his face and breast, which were pierced all over, yet he was not much disfigured. A young Dane, working with the party, was behind the door at the time, hardly two feet from where Clatterbuck stood. No one actually saw Jackson aim and fire, but Collins made a rush for the man as he threw the gun away and fled. Seeing pursuit hopeless, he returned and attended to his sinking comrade. They brought him into the kitchen and laid him on the floor. In a few minutes he was dead.

Although the assassin took to the woods and escaped he was captured a few days afterwards. His trial has been an unusually interesting one and the verdict in the case has given satisfaction.

Rumors of lynching the murderer are rife, and it is feared that after Blan's execution the mob may resort to force. The Sheriff, however, has taken all due precautions to suppress any attempt at lawlessness, and has called out the militia.

BAD FOR JONES.

Mr. J. B. McCullagh, Foreman of the Late Grand Jury, Tells a Story.

How Jones Wanted Two of His Clients Indicted, so He Could Make a Fee.

All About Heller and His Minority Report.

The taking of depositions in the suit of Wm. C. Jones against the late grand jury was resumed at 10 o'clock this morning at the office of Lee & Chandler, before Notary Wieder.

Mr. Alphonse F. Perrier, being duly sworn, said: I am deputy clerk in the Circuit Court. I filled the same position in February, 1871, in Circuit Court No. 4. Mr. Mills asked the witness to identify some papers which he handed him. Mr. McCabe objected to the same as irrelevant. Objection not sustained. Mr. McCabe then proceeded: These are the papers filed in the Circuit Court of two cases in which Chas. G. Mauro was plaintiff and Stephen Myers and William C. Jones defendants, on an appeal from Justice Wolff to Circuit Court. I identify the notes contained in the same. One is a due bill due March 28, 1867, signed W. C. Jones and Jones & Myers, payable to Chas. G. Mauro, and the other a due bill to the same party, dated April 20, 1867, and signed Jones & Myers and W. C. Jones. The amounts of these bills were $250 and $150 respectively. The judgments in both cases have been satisfied. The witness was then dismissed.

JAS. R. CLAIBORNE,

on examination by Mr. Mills, said: I am a lawyer. Have practiced in St. Louis since 1866, in Criminal Court of St. Louis. Am acquainted with Wm. C. Jones and have known him since 1867. I knew him while on the bench. Also know Hiram M. Smit, who is a pawnbroker. I remember of a man who employed me to prosecute Mr. Smit for alleged larceny of some $80 of gold coin in 1877. I made a statement of the case to the Assistant Prosecuting Attorney. He brought it before the grand jury and an indictment followed. When the case was called The indictment was found defective, and a nolle pros. was entered at once. The indictment was grossly defective in that the foreman had neglected to sign it. It was useless without this signature. It was the practice for the Judge to examine all indictments when received from the grand jury and see that they were properly signed. He never knew of such a case before. The prosecuting witness was in court when the case was nolle pros'ed and afterwards annoyed witness about the failure of the case. Another indictment was afterwards sought. He did not know that Mr. Smit had ever stayed away when wanted in a case. He could have found him when wanted.

Mr. Turner here took up the examination, questioning the witness at length relative to the character of the witnesses in this case, which did not come off. The witness knew Smit only as he had seen him in and about court. Mr. Claiborne then continued: I know James and Margaret Duffy. Mrs. Duffy kept a house of assignation and a saloon and James assisted her. Had been their attorney since 1867. James Duffy had been much around the courts, and was acquainted with all the officials. Everybody knew him. H. M. Smit was often around the courts and went on bonds. He was well known. Had not heard Smit's character discussed. Duffy and wife were good clients of his; they paid well and gave him plenty of work. Their business made them liable to be brought in frequently, and they were. The Judge of the Criminal Court would be likely to know such a man. Had seen Duffy talking with all the officials generally but none in particular. Knew Max L. Gumpert pretty well, and his reputation was not very good. Gumpert had been frequently before the courts and his character freely discussed. Never heard Jones speak of his character. The witness had subscribed $5 to paintings of Judges Jones and Cady. Gumpert brought the subscription list to him, but a collector got the money. Couldn't say that the picture business was run by Gumpert. Did not know that Gumpert and Jones were intimate. Had not seen them drink together. Did not know that it was useless to prosecute Gumpert on account of his intimacy with Jones. Had heard something said, but not so strong as that. Had heard it said that Gumpert and Jones were intimate while the latter was judge.

Witness attended the laying of the corner-stone of the new county Court-house. He went in a carriage furnished by Dan Honig. Did not remember exactly who was in the carriage, but thought Judge Jones was not. Thought Jones went in another carriage; did not know whose carriage. Andy Clabby, Judge Cady and Marshal Coff, he thought, were in the carriage with him. Never knew of Jones going fishing with Honig's teams. Witness remembered about a forfeited bond of Joseph Funk for $1,000, ... Duffy as security, ... years ago. Funk was ... Duffy. He knew that Duffy ...d away his property on the Friday be...re the preliminary election for delegates to the Congressional convention last fall. He mortgaged his property. He did not know that execution was issued on the forfeited bond only on the day after Duffy had conveyed away his property. Did not know that Funk's bond had been held a long time before execution was issued. If execution had been issued Duffy was perfectly good for it. Duffy paid $9,000 for his lot and $9,000 for his house. He had always been a good bondsman so far as he knew. He didn't know that the Funk bond had been pigeon-holed without the knowledge of the prosecuting attorney, until after Duffy had disposed of his property. Did not remember hearing Mr. Beach say that he knew nothing of the bond until it was too late. Mrs. Duffy's dance-house was on Morgan street; it was a low one as all such were. A great many arrests took place there.

Mr. Mills asked if (in the Smit case) there had been a nolle prosequi, or whether the court simply dismissed the case. Witness did not remember. Did not know the date of this case, but thought it was in the summer of 1878. There was a statutory provision that the Judge should examine each bill to see if it was perfect, and such was the practice.

The cross-examination by Mr. McCabe elicited no additional information. To nearly every question asked in the direct examination objection was made and filed.

MR. M'CULLAGH.

Mr. Turner questioning, the witness, Mr. McCullagh, said: My name is Joseph B. McCullagh. I am editor of the Globe-Democrat. I was a member and foreman of the grand jury for the March term of the Criminal Court. The number of indictments returned by that jury was about 200. In returning the indictments to Judge Laughlin, I, as foreman, handed them to the Judge in his desk, and then took my place with the jury. The Judge looked at them to see if signed, and then handed them to the clerk. In one case I had neglected to sign the indictment. Judge Laughlin called my attention to it, and I signed it there. I know Wm. C. Jones on and off ever since the Chicago fire. Always was on friendly terms with him. In the campaign of '74, when he was running for Judge, S. Voullaire had come to him a few days before election day and offered some affidavits in the Stephens and Myers case, and wanted him to publish them. He had refused because there was not sufficient time for Mr. Jones to refute them, although he wished to see Voullaire elected.

Witness then went on to speak of the examination of charges against Judge Jones before the grand jury and the report made. I never had any ill feelings against Judge Jones. The Circuit Attorney appeared before the grand jury as a witness and a very important one. He was a very unwilling witness, but his testimony was more important than that of any one else. He did not produce all the evidence he had against Jones. He had a diary which had important evidence against Jones, but he never produced it and said he would not unless compelled to. He said he had often gone home and wept over the abuse of justice by Judge Jones.

The final evidence given against Jones was by Frank D. Turner and consisted of certain depositions, Col. Claiborne, Mr. Beach, a police officer, Mrs. Gumpert, several deputy marshals in the horse-shark business. We heard much testimony not mentioned in the report. One item was that Jones had been in Mrs. Duffy's house of prostitution. The man who told this had been a Deputy Sheriff. I was convinced of the truth of this by the conduct of Jones himself. Jones told me himself it was a put up job and said it in such a way that it made me believe he was at Mrs. Duffy's. The witness said Jones was at Mrs. Duffy's the night before her trial. He left the impression on me that Jones had really been at the place. Jones was principally concerned when he visited me about keeping clear of an indictment. He came to see me often down at my office while the grand jury was in session. On one occasion I spoke about indicting the gamblers, and showed him a list of names. He looked at it and said that two of his clients were not on it—Bensley Brothers. I had asked him if he could suggest any other names. He said if we indicted these two men he would make $100 out of it. I have since learned that Jones appeared as attorney for these men when they came up for trial under an indictment found by us. Jones came to me one day very much excited and said he understood we were going to indict him. I said his case was not then being considered and asked him who told him he was to be indicted. He said Ed. McCarty. McCarty afterwards told me that Jones did not get any such information from him. Jones came to me again and said he would like to put in some rebutting evidence in his case, before the grand jury, but we could not admit it. Judge Heller was then acting as Prosecuting Attorney against Jones. He afterwards turned over on the other side very suddenly. I do not think Heller wrote his minority report. I know his literary qualifications, and while that minority report was bad enough, it was a good deal better than Heller can write. That minority report ought to have been signed by both Heller and Jones. Heller's report was not given to the court, and was not read in court. Heller was the only man on the grand jury who displayed any ill-feeling toward Judge Jones. This was at the beginning. The last interview I had with Judge Jones before we made our report, he said if we censured him he would hold us responsible. It was an attemp... ...date, and he tried to influence other ... grand jury the same way. ... grand jury-room ... All ... in the r... nesses. ... about h... conclud...

report was read over and over again and was well considered.

The change in Heller was sudden and unaccountable. Mr. Heller made himself very offensive. I heard that Heller and Jones were together. A deputy named Erskine told me that Jones and Heller were together at night, and a man named Boatwright told me the same thing. I complained of Heller to Judge Laughlin and he proposed to discharge him, but I said I supposed we could get along. All the members of the grand jury voted for the report except Heller. I kept the report lying on the table so all could see it; it was fully discussed and was fully satisfactory to all but Heller. After the report was signed we took it down and I handed it to Judge Laughlin. I had met Judge Laughlin the night before and I told him I had that report ready. He said he did not want to see it till it was handed to him on the bench. The direct examination of Mr. McCullagh here closed, and he was excused.

was then examined as to the intimacy of Jones with Max Gumpert, James Duffy, Mrs. Duffy and H. M. Smit, but the witness revealed nothing new.

CROSS-EXAMINED.

The cross-examination of Mr. McCullagh was begun at 2 o'clock. The testimony was substantially as follows:

Mr. McCabe read from that portion of the grand jury report referring to Judge Jones, and then proceeded to question the witness, who gave, in substance, the following testimony:

Col. Nat. Claiborne was the one who informed the grand jury of the notes of Judge Jones held by James Duffy.

Mrs. Gumpert testified in regard to the relations of Max. Gumpert to Judge Jones. The testimony of Mr. Beach also covered these cases.

The information concerning the Smit business was derived through depositions and Mr. Beach.

Officer Dowling testified concerning the horse-sharks. Deputy Marshal Hohoff also testified that he had gone to Honig for horses for himself or any body about the Four Courts. A man named Dattelzweig, under conviction and afterwards sent to the penitentiary, also appeared before us; but I did not swear him, and told the grand jury that they could take his statement for what it was worth. I did not consider it worth anything alone, but it was valuable in connection with other testimony. He had been one of the horse-sharks, and knew all about Honig's business.

I am the editor of the Globe-Democrat and wrote an article saying that Judge Laughlin had gone too far in allowing the grand jury to arrest a man without a warrant. The first I heard of being selected for the grand jury was through a joking remark of Mr. Taylor. I had no desire to serve and did not seek the place as foreman. I never said, except in a humorous way, that I was to be on the grand jury. I may have spoken of it to Dick Lancaster, but I never talked to Judge Laughlin about it.

FINANCIAL.

Except an increased demand and stronger tone to New York exchange there was just about the same quiet business transacted at the banks as has been noted for some time past; some banks even reported less doing. Discount offerings were small and covered about the usual lines on local account, while not very much paper was discounted for the city. Counter transactions moderate. Sales of exchange were made at 50c discount to par, with a fair demand and tendency upward. Securities were generally better and strong, but there was no movement in a local way. Some inquiries for North Missouri firsts; a few county bonds offered for sale.

Breadstuffs and Provisions.

MORNING BOARD—9:30 A. M. to 1 P. M.

Flour was "down in the valley and shadow" sure enough to-day. The demand was exceptionally light and price lower, grades below xxx being absolutely neglected and only salable at a sharp decline; better qualities dull but held steadier than other descriptions, owing to their comparatively smaller offerings. We quote the closing rates: Fine, $3 10@3 30; superfine, $3 55@3 75; x, $4 00@4 20; xx, $4 30@4 50; xxx, $4 70@4 90; family, $5 10@5 25; choice, $5 40@5 60; fancy, $5 70@6 00.

Wheat—Grades panicky, dull and largely lower. Opening sales were at $1 12 for No. 2, $1 08⅜ for No. 3, 98c for No. 4; later in day 5,000 bushels No. 2 brought $1 09⅛ (3⅛c decline), but we doubt if over $1 09 could have been realized at close; No. 3 declined 1⅛c from opening rate; No. 4 in East elevator offered and untaken late at 96c. Samples down too—very best qualities full 1c off, but salable; low grades dead dull and largely lower, we may say 3c down. Spring dull too, 2 cares grade No. 2 sold at 90c, 1 car No. 3 at 85c, and 200 sks medium on levee by sample at 90c. Sales: Grades [this side and st. fr. unless otherwise stated]—7 cars No. 2 red early at $1 12, 1 car do at $1 11⅛, 5,000 bu do reg at $1 09⅛; 7 cars No. 3 red early at $1 08⅜, 5 do later and at close at $1 07⅛; 1 car No. 4 early at 98c; 1 car No. 2 Mediterranean in east elev. at $1 12.

CATTLE—There was a fair demand for butcher stuff this forenoon, and the light offerings of grass Texans and Indians found ready disposal at unchanged prices. Total supply light, about fifty car loads, that was of a mixed character. Native cattle slow and quiet. Buyers were looking around but did not seem to be in a hurry about entering the market. The reports from New York, Chicago, and other points not very flattering; as a result this did not encourage shippers much, and had the supply been large it would have been neglected. Yesterday afternoon there was but little doing, the supply proving light. For range of prices see the sales given below. No doubt the run will be light for the balance of the week, but this will not prove a great hardship to buyers. Fair light to good native steers steady, but all other grades slow. Stock cattle and feeding steers slow and unchanged. Milch cows with calves dull. Ruling quotations quiet.

HOGS—Business was of a lively character this forenoon and the moderate supply found prompt and immediate disposal at strong prices. The bulk of the supply consisted of good Yorker grades and brought $3 35@3 40 to $3 45 ℔ 100 lbs. Shippers were the leading operators, they paying the above figures for light shipping hogs. Smooth and rough heavy hogs are scarce and in moderate demand only at $3 15@3.40, select $3 45@3 50, but not many are wanted. By the hour of noon the pens were cleared of stock, and more could have been sold were they in the pens. Values firm at $2@3 for skips and culls; $3 10@3 25 for rough and heavy; $3 30@3 45 for Yorkers and Baltimores, and $3 40@3 50 for smooth and select.
